

19th century beech wood pounce pot

Sold

Description

19th century beech wood pounce pot in the form of a castle tower.

Pounce pots were small containers designed to hold pounce powder-a fine substance used to absorb excess ink and prevent smudging. Typically crafted from turned wood and adorned with intricate designs, these pots were practical tools for early writing and manuscript work.