Description

A 19th century French Champagne serving tap with rosewood handle and serpent spout.

Champagne serving taps are specialised devices designed for dispensing champagne directly from a bottle or barrel, enhancing the serving experience. Originating in the late 19th century, these taps allowed for more controlled pouring and reduced the risk of spills or overfizzing.

Typically made of stainless steel or brass, they often feature elegant designs that reflect the luxury of champagne. Serving taps are particularly popular at large celebrations or events, making it easier to serve guests while preserving the champagne's effervescence and flavour.
