Description

A beautifully tactile provincial 19th century elm chopping board.

Antique chopping boards tell quiet stories of kitchens long gone. Worn knife marks, darkened patina, and softened edges reveal years of daily meals and careful hands. Made from maple, beech, or oak, they were built for endurance, not display.

Each scar records a moment: bread sliced, herbs crushed, roasts prepared for family gatherings. Today, these boards are treasured as functional art, blending utility with history. They bring warmth to modern spaces while reminding us of slower rhythms, resourcefulness, and the beauty of objects shaped by honest, repeated use.

Collectors value authenticity, craftsmanship, provenance, age, imperfections, sustainability, and tactile character today.
