Description

A 19th century cranberry flash glass scent bottle.

Flash glass is a type of glass composed of a thin, coloured outer layer fused to a clear or differently coloured inner layer. This layered structure allows for intricate designs through techniques like engraving or acid etching, revealing the contrasting colours beneath.

Commonly used in stained glass art, flash glass provides vibrant hues while maintaining flexibility in crafting detailed patterns. Its versatility and striking visual effects make it a favourite choice for decorative windows and artistic applications.
