Description

A large hand-carved delightfully wobbly African wooden taza, signed to base circa 1930.

African wooden tazas are traditional, handcrafted shallow bowls or trays made from various types of wood, often by skilled artisans. They are commonly used for serving food, especially in communal gatherings or ceremonial events. These beautifully carved tazas often feature intricate patterns and symbols that reflect cultural values or local traditions. Originating from different African regions, they showcase the continent's rich artistic heritage, blending functionality with artistic expression. Their natural, earthy tones add aesthetic warmth to any space.
