Description

MaxLume green enamel parabolic lamp shade fitted with bronze lamp-holder and black fabric flex. Circa 1950.

The manufacturer's stamp is still visible on some but not all of these shades.

Enamel light shades are timeless home accessories known for their durability and industrial charm. Typically made from metal and coated with vitreous enamel, these shades were popular in factories, barns, and kitchens during the early to mid-20th century. Their glossy, colourful finishes-ranging from classic white and green to bold reds and blues-offer both function and style.

Today, they're highly sought after for retro, farmhouse, or industrial-style interiors. Signs of wear, such as chips or rust, often enhance their character. Restored or repurposed, vintage enamel light shades bring authentic, nostalgic appeal to modern lighting designs and home décor.
