Description

A 19th century naive handmade brass jug signed K Rofsignal, Brugge 1880.

Naive metalwork refers to metal art created by self-taught or untrained artisans, often characterised by a raw, unrefined aesthetic. This style emphasises simplicity and personal expression over technical precision, often using basic tools and traditional techniques.

Naive metalwork can include functional objects like tools and furniture, as well as decorative pieces such as sculptures or jewelry. The charm of naive metalwork lies in its authenticity, reflecting the maker's individual creativity and unique vision, often influenced by local culture or tradition.
