Description

A late Victorian silver engraved crumb scoop with ornate ivorine handle, hallmarked for London 1894.

A crumb scoop is a small, elegant tool used to remove crumbs from a table, typically between courses or before dessert in fine dining settings. Often made of silver or stainless steel, it features a curved blade or scoop designed to easily gather crumbs from tablecloths or surfaces. Crumb scoops add a touch of refinement to the dining experience, maintaining cleanliness and enhancing the overall presentation of the meal.
